Administering Institution: Charles Sturt University

Summary: Through a critical examination of current integrity systems and sub-systems across a range of police forces, in depth empirical explorations at the primary research site (VicPol) and analyses of practical ethical problems, a high performance integrity system will be designed and tested. The significance of this project is its comprehensiveness, its use of a reliable theory of organizational ethical health, and of a methodology that allows for the full incorporation of practitioner views. Outcomes of the project will include data generating arrangements that provide evidence of achieved levels of compliance, integrity and performance.

Summary: This project is concerned with identity management technology in the context of law enforcement and homeland security. The demand for personal data by law enforcement agencies in the struggle against international crime and global terrorism is greatly increasing, as is the technical means to meet this demand. At the same time individual freedom, privacy and civil liberties have to be respected if contemporary liberal democracy is to be preserved. The project seeks to provide legally sustainable and technologically feasible global ethical standards for identity management technology (e.g., electronic surveillance, data-mining of personal data and profiling) and policies in the contemporary global security context. The standards in question are to be understood as global ethical standards potentially to be adopted not only by the US, but also by the European Union, Australasia, and all other relevant liberal democratic states, e.g. India and Japan. The project distinguishes itself from other work in this field by integrating the expertise of ethicists, lawyers, law enforcement personnel and computer specialists in the development of the framework of global ethical standards. The work will be performed by a multi-disciplinary, international team of academics and consultants, from the USA, Europe, India, Japan and Australasia.

Project Summary

Leaders are seen as exemplifying and guiding the climate of police organisations. This project will deliver comprehensive, comparative, and internationally relevant empirical data on the relationship between leaders' approach and behaviours and the achievement of outcomes in these significant, high profile public sector organisations. On this foundation the project will make recommendations on innovative institutional design to achieve ethical, effective and efficient policing capable of withstanding the challenges of the future. This will increase public confidence in policing, resulting in safer communities and improved crime control. This proposal contributes to the ARC research priority of Safeguarding Australia.
